Slashers are a subgenre of horror fiction that typically features a masked killer who stalks and murders a group of victims. The killer is often motivated by revenge or a desire for bloodlust, and their methods are often brutal and sadistic.

The slasher genre emerged in the 1970s with films like "Halloween" and "Friday the 13th." These films established the conventions of the genre, including the masked killer, the body count, and the final girl who survives to face the killer.

Slashers have remained popular over the years, and they continue to be a staple of horror cinema. Some of the most iconic slashers include Michael Myers, Jason Voorhees, and Freddy Krueger.

zombies include the living dead in George A. Romero's "Night of the Living Dead" and the infected in "The Walking Dead."

Aliens

Aliens are extraterrestrial beings that are often depicted as being superior to humans in terms of intelligence and technology. They can be friendly or hostile, and their motives for visiting Earth are often unknown.
