About the Authors

Edward Carpenter (1844-1927) was a British socialist, poet, and writer. He was a leading figure in the late 19th century men's rights movement, and his writings on the subject remain influential today.

Havelock Ellis (1859-1939) was a British sexologist and writer. He was one of the first people to write about the importance of sexual pleasure for both men and women, and his work helped to lay the foundation for the modern understanding of human sexuality.

Belfort Bax (1854-1926) was a British socialist, philosopher, and writer. He was a strong advocate for men's rights, and his writings on the subject helped to shape the early development of the men's rights movement.
