The wagons were packed full with everything from basic necessities to a family's most treasured possessions. Heavy items often had to be abandoned along the trail.

The canvas top was supported by a frame of bowed wood. The ends could be closed with a drawstring in bad weather.

Beams of mules or oxen pulled the heavy wagons.

Wagons were constructed mostly of wood and with a minimum of metal parts in order to keep them lightweight.

The wooden wheels were rimmed in iron to prevent wear.
